DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 24-46 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Tantry et al. in view of Friedman et al.

Tantry et al. shows all of the limitations of the claims except for specifying the use of XML dotted notation and automatically generating a mapping table.

Tantry et al. shows, figure 6, an object-oriented architecture for factory floor management (supply chain network). There are multiple barcode readers (DSE), which are linked to communication managers (adapters). The combination of the two is a (SDA). Standard TCP/IP protocol is used (Universal Protocol). Database 66 is the data center. Application servers are the site servers and event handlers. Callback routines map user interactions from the X-server (X-events) to specific Application Engine functionality. Thus, Application Engines bridge the user interface widget library (description documents) with the factory services/factory object library.

The examiner takes Official Notice that the use of XML and dotted notation are old and well known and that it would be obvious to use them in order to take advantage of standardized methods.

Based on the discussion above, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time the invention was made, to modify the Tantry et al. system to use XML and dotted notation in order to take advantage of standardized methods.

Friedman et al. teaches methods for parsing XML data streams. Column 2, lines 15-17, teaches that XML is a useful language to use in the exchange of data between different entities (much like the components of Tantry). The abstract, lines 13-17, teaches the automated generation of a mapping table in order to organize data inputs into a more usable format.

Based on the teaching of Friedman et al., it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time the invention was made, to modify the application servers (event handlers) of the Tantry et al. system to incorporate the XML data stream system of Friedman, including the automated generation of a mapping table in order to organize data inputs into a more usable format.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments filed 1/14/08 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

Applicant is basing their argument for patentability on a circular argument about what a description document is. "Specification information" forms a "description document". What is "specification information"? It is still the very broad term of "event information". The prior art rejection already show generating a mapping table based on the broad term "event information". Therefore, generating a mapping table based on the description document is also met.

Conclusion

THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
